Arms Sale to El Salvador Is Reversed

Bureaucratic red tape, if not President Carter's human rights policies, may have saved a few poor souls in El Salvador from being gunned down by the military dictatorship's soldiers.

The incident is worth recording as sad evidence that the bureaucrats in their State Department cubicles were paying little attention to the President's statements. Early in February, the military government of El Salvador placed an order with an American arms dealer for $96,227.85 in weapons, including hollow-point bullets and submachine guns.

These ugly goods, according to license applications filed with the State Department, were needed for "internal security." The applications didn't mention that the government had scheduled national elections on Feb. 20, and expected trouble from a restive populace. The weapons were to be used, apparently, against opponents of the military regime.

State Department officials approved the sale, with the exception of a few items, in time for delivery before the election. But in a bureaucracy, a decision is seldom final. Any bureaucrat worth his salt will seek the endorsement of others to reduce his own liability. The weapons sale approval, therefore, was bucked to other desks for comment.

The elections were held in El Salvador, meanwhile, without the extra hollow-point bullets and submachine guns. Ballot boxes, conveniently stuffed beforehand, were substituted for the real thing. Additional votes were cast in the names of citizens in the cemeteries.

Poll watchers, who questioned these tactics, were intimidated and arrested. To no one's great surprise, the military-backed candidates were triumphant. Protests by the opposition party were brutally suppressed. The government claimed only five people were killed, but our sources say at least 100 El Salvadorans died.

This sort of unpleasantness could have backfired on the officials who approved the arms sale. They reconsidered the approval which was still circulating in the bureaucratic labyrinth. As one official put it delicately: "The passage of time had produced a different set of conditions in El Salvador."

The previous decision, therefore, was revoked. The sale of some weapons was disapproved; others were held up for "further consideration." The bureaucrats, in other words, had unwittingly prevented the sale of arms which probably would have been used by the military dictatorship to fire upon those who dared to protest the fraudulent elections.

People Poisoning—Thousands of people have been poisoned and at least 40 people have died during the past five years as a result of the overuse of pesticides in Central America. The cotton fields have been saturated with some toxic chemicals that are now banned in the United States.

These are the findings of a United Nations environmental team, which conducted an 18-month study of pesticide use in the cotton-growing areas of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua.

"To varying degrees," the team reported, "almost all components of the Central American ecosystem have been affected." In 1,600 samples, the team found various levels of highly toxic DDT, deadly Parathion, and the suspected cancer-causing Toxophene.

The reckless use of pesticides has gone on for over 15 years under the auspices of the wealthy Central American families who own many of the cotton plantations. They've made huge fortunes by selling cotton to Asian countries which, in turn, manufacture clothing for U.S. markets.

At the same time, the environmental devastation caused by the pesticides has forced some impoverished small farmers to leave their land. Their pitiful plots have become so contaminated that they cannot grow enough corn and beans. This has turned them into peons who survive by working for the large cotton plantations.

It was not until some of the land barons' own cattle became contaminated that they began to be concerned about the problem. In the past 15 years, at least $1.7 million in beef cattle has been tainted by pesticides.

The UN team was brought to Central American to assess the damage and to introduce pest management techniques. Earlier UN efforts had already brought a gradual reduction in human poisoining, from 6,078 cases in 1972 to 2,074 in 1975. The new UN team was able to reduce pesticide use by as much as 63 per cent on test plots.

Footnote: One insect that has resisted the poisonious enviornment is the tough malaria mosquito, which seems to thrive on pesticides. The central American governments are now using costly propoxur to fight the deadly mosquito. The result has been fewer sprayings and a rise in the incidence of malaria.

Jim:

Thanks for the interesting clippings. Pesticide use has been quite heavy over many parts of Latin America, and although I have not seen much published material on the subject, I feel that our migratory birds get much worst treatment in this respect south of the border than they do in the U.S.

You know how I feel about Black Jack, of course. For an interesting experiment, try tasting Black Jack in direct comparison with Bourbon Deluxe--at half the price.

Sorry you and Jim Watson missed the foray. It was great fun, as always, with many interesting results. We had a pair of Dickcissels, a pair of Bobolinks, a colony of Long-billed Marsh Wrens, and other high spots. We missed Black-and-white Warblers, which was anticipated, and we got Song Sparrows only at South Boston. Had two Red-cockaded colonies, but the young were gone and we couldn't find the birds.
